

Acknowledgements

There are some people that we want to thank for helping with this publication. Without their help, none of this could have been accomplished, and words cannot describe how grateful we are.

We would like to thank the James Madison University's Interdisciplinary Liberal Studies program and the English Department for supporting our journal.

A thank you also goes out to the Children's Literature classes and the writers who submitted their hard work. It is your stories that create the journal. We merely made them pretty.

Thank you to our illustrators. By now, you know that the ability to learn visually is something that children can appreciate, and you've done great jobs using your skills.

Finally, a very special thanks to Dr. Maria-Odette Canivell, for providing us with the inspiration to carry out our class's mission to publish our children's stories. This could not have been created without her initiative and help.
